The Division of Gastroenterology at Massachusetts General Hospital welcomes applications from qualified individuals for a position as a Gastrointestinal Hospitalist. The GI Hospitlist will split their time between the inpatient consult service, outpatient endoscopy sessions, and academic pursuits. The GI Hospitalist will be expected to work 24-26 weeks on the General GI Inpatient service. During this time, they will cover half of the inpatient consult volume of the general GI service. The other half of the service volume will be covered by a rotating non-hospitalist GI Attending. Coverage will include Monday through Friday daytime hours and include supervision of fellows. For 22-24 weeks during the year, the GI Hospitalist will be expected to perform 5-6 outpatient endoscopy half-day sessions. The remainder of the non-inpatient weeks will be protected for the pursuit of academic interests. Initial appointment will be at the Instructor, Assistant, or Associate Professor level at Harvard Medical School commensurate with qualifications and in the Gastroenterology Division, MGH. The GI Hospitalist reports directly to the Clinical Chief of Gastroenterology. The MGH GI Division is at the forefront of clinical care, fellowship training, and investigation in gastroenterology and hepatology. Successful candidates will possess strong consultative and endoscopic skills and the ability to work collaboratively. Applicants should be committed to teaching as a requirement for this position and demonstrated success in the supervision and education of trainees is desirable. Candidates must be board certified in gastroenterology. MGH is an Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer. Inquiries by women and applicants under-represented in medicine are encouraged.
