The Gastrointestinal Unit at Massachusetts General Hospital welcomes applications from qualified individuals for a full-time clinical position in our general gastroenterology program. The MGH GI Unit is at the forefront of clinical care, fellowship training, and investigation in gastroenterology and hepatology. Successful candidates will possess strong consultative and endoscopic skills in both the outpatient and inpatient settings and the ability to work collaboratively. Experience and interest in the supervision and education of trainees is desirable. Experience or interest in IBD is welcome but not required. Initial appointment can be at the Instructor, Assistant, or Associate Professor level at Harvard Medical School commensurate with qualifications, and in the Gastrointestinal Unit, MGH.

We are an equal opportunity employer and all qualified applicants will receive consideration for employment without regard to race, color, religion, sex, national origin, disability status, protected veteran status, gender identity, sexual orientation, pregnancy and pregnancy-related conditions or any other characteristic protected by law. Inquiries by qualified women and minority applicants are encouraged.
