

Professor of Clinical X Committee

Committee Charge

The Professor of Clinical X (PCX) Committee is a standing committee of the Dean composed of senior faculty at HMS/HSDM. The PCX reviews and makes recommendations to the Dean regarding all appointments to the rank of Professor of Clinical X and to Professor of the Practice.

Committee Selection

Nomination: Prospective candidates are solicited via self-nomination, recommendations from current committee members, department and/or executive committee chairs across institutions, academic deans, program leaders, committee outreach to partners and stakeholders, and/or committee administrative search. All candidates must be available for outreach from committee members and/or the committee chair and agree to attend 2/3 of committee meetings. Nominees are vetted by the Deans for Faculty Affairs and Clinical and Academic Affairs, and names are submitted to the Faculty Council for formal vote.

Distribution for all Standing Committees of Harvard Medical School is sought across departments, specialties, and professional background, based on required areas of expertise and academic rank. Up to 3 seats per committee can be appointed by the Dean to broaden representation.

Qualifications for the Professor of Clinical X Committee: Committee members are professors. The committee meets monthly except for December and August.

Terms: Members are invited for a 1-year term; based on attendance and contributions, at the end of the first year they are either asked to continue for 2 more years or thanked for their service. Members rotate off after a three-year term in a staggered fashion (1/3 per year).
